**Flash CS6:** Adobe Flash technology gives designers the ability to add animation, interactive components to web content. The exciting feature of Flash CS6 is its ability to read and write SVG files, which are vector-based files that produce extremely precise graphics. You can animate objects created with SVG using Adobe Flash. Adobe also provides many online tutorials and webinars on using Adobe Flash.

Q: 4D/Real vector vs. 4D/Float vector - Numpy/Scipy I am trying to use Numpy/Scipy to calculate the response of a neural network given a set of input vector features. One of the features is the temperature, a 4D array. I have two options: Use a 4D/Real vector array instead of 4D/Float vector (Numpy.float64) Normalize the temperature feature first to a [0,1] interval prior to passing it to the neural network Which of these methods would have better performance? Which one is less error-prone? A: The second option is better for two reasons: Underflow problems of float64 can't be avoided. Underflow means, that the input value is higher than the max. value of a float64 and even the machine epsilon doesn't help a bit. You cannot assign a float64 value to a real scalar without a type conversion. Furthermore, float64 are machine epsilon not suitable for representing values like temperature. I think, you should stick to option 1 (not recommended, but more popular), if you don't need extreme accuracy. In my opinion, You should always stick to real numbers when numerical values are involved. Option 2 is not recommended, because it is a workaround. With this workaround, you cannot do the calculation on a meaningful level. E.g. you may get different results if input values are applied in combination with each other. G6PD Genotypes, Haemolysis, Oxidative Stress and Clinical Response to Dapsone Monotherapy in Patients with Tuberculous Pyomyositis. Tuberculous pyomyositis is an increasingly common complication of human immunodeficiency virus infection. Clinical response to antituberculous treatment is variable, with delayed control of pain and duration of hospitalization being important determinants of response. Glucose-6-phosphate dehydrogenase (G6PD) deficiency is the most common human enzymopathy and is associated with increased oxidative stress. Oxidative stress is relevant to the pathophysiology of pyomyositis and has been associated with adverse outcomes. The study aims to evaluate the association between G6PD deficiency and clinical response to dapsone in tuberculous pyomyositis. A total of 74 patients with tuberculous pyomyosit

Q: NodeJS Express router set new authentication headers on 401 error I'm struggling to set custom headers to my Express server. My Express Router is set up like: const router = express.Router(); router.get('/user/:id', (req, res, next) => { // fetch user from database User.findById(req.params.id, (err, user) => { if (err) { next(err); } else { console.log(user); // update res.cookie for authenticated user res.cookie('user', JSON.stringify(user), { expires: new Date(Date.now() + 86400000), httpOnly: true }); next(); } }); }); I am actually trying to put authentication headers and token. My provider returns 302 code if authentication header is missing, and 401 if the token is not valid. My application keep on receiving the original headers when an authenticated user logs out. I have tried to set up a middleware with error listeners and return res.send({ proper authentication header and token }) before returning next(); but that does not work. From what I have read, I understand that my application was not receiving the proper authentication header. However in my case, I was receiving the request. I have found a way of recieving the correct headers on 401 error, but the response has not been send. router.post('/user/token', middleware, (req, res, next) => { res.status(401).send({ error: 'Unauthorized', auth: req.isAuthenticated()});
